

A night sky the games leave behind

Every time you finish an artwork in a Weavo game, one star lights up in your sky. Six stars make a constellation, and six constellations make one night.

1. How a star lights up

Finish an artwork in Find the Piece or Color by Number and that artwork becomes a star. The two games are separate stars, so finishing the same artwork in both gives you two.

- Playing the same artwork again does not add a star.
- Finishing a harder Color by Number board makes the star you already have burn bigger.
- Find the Piece stars are warm gold; Color by Number stars are blue.

2. Six stars make a constellation

Six stars complete one constellation. Each has its own name and a single line, and six constellations make one "night".

"Hope" with four of six stars — the rest are dots still waiting.

3. Where to find it

The "My constellations" card in the game menu

The constellation strip on your profile

The note on the result screen after a game

The address is weavo.art/en/stars. Tap a star to open that artwork, share any finished constellation as a picture, and use "See every constellation" to view them all on one screen.

Common questions

If an artwork is removed, do I lose its star?

No. A star keeps the artwork title and the artist's name with it, so it stays in your sky even if the picture comes down.

Is there a ranking?

No. Constellations are for collecting, not competing. There is no number that compares you with anyone.

Can I keep mine private?

Yes — turn on "Hide my constellations from others" on the constellations page and nobody else can open your sky.

Do I need an account?

You can play without one, but stars are only kept for a signed-in account.

Do games I played earlier count?

Yes. Everything finished before the feature opened was carried over into stars.
